F the Industry of the Writers on the Side of Faction, and their artful Pretentions to Virrue and Patriotism be considered, 'tis rather to be wondered, that they had not corrupted the whole People, than that they had only de-luded a Part of them. For fuch is the attractive Quality

d Fine, that even the bare Appearance of it is rally cheriff d and rever'd.

But the' the Power thus a cribed to even the Apperance of that inchanting Goddels, be admitted as a Pics in favour of the Deluded, yet when once this delutory Garb is laid afide, and the Impostors appear in their native Cosours, and are detected, to far should those that had been imposed upon by them, be from prishing in their Delusion, or continuing an illigid's Dilection for their Deluders, that, with the beach Pidgeons in the Fable, they cught, One and all, to join in driving the incendiary, imposing Jack low from the Dovecote. They ought, with the Greek, who were for a Time imposed upon by some Tojan that had fought in Grecian Armour, to treat those difguifed Patriots with that severe Justice that all Eperites should be.

If in Private Life Hypocrify be in its Nature so deteflable as scarce ever to be pardon'd, how rig rously finald it be treated when 'tis wore with a View of unlinging National Settlements, and creating uni-

Could I suppose that there is at this time one Man in the Nation, who has not from the Light of his on Resections seen into the Hypeerify of the incen-ting Declaimers of our Days, I would be at the Pains of pointing out from their own Voluminous Works, fo many Irrefragable Proofs of their Doublehaling, as must convince the most incredulous; but al cannot think to meanly of my Countrymen, a to suppose any of the unprejudic'd amongst them, macquainted with the Drift and Defigns of the Weekly Demagogues, I shall at present animadvert he has spread the Varoish so very thin, that 'tis im-

Far from inveighing against those that perficiously set to strengthen themselves by many Alliances, in order to fmite us with the graater Certainty; far from joining, and wishing his Prince the Success due tom joining, and wishing his Prince the Success due to his Virtues, and from appearing to wish his Country delivered from the impending Dangers, we find the Patriot D'Anvers in his last Journal, treating our just Apprehensions as chimerical, and sporting with the gathering of Clouds almost ready to burst upon the gathering of Clouds almost ready to burst upon the Liberties and Properties.

I won't suppose the Author of the Crafisman to be in shallow a Politician, or so near-sighted, as not to see the Designs against his Country, and be convinced at the Necessity of arming early in order to defeat of the Necessity of arming early in order to defeat such Defigns; but it was not for his Purpose to have a now'd the Convictions of his own Heart.

Had Caleb own'd, that fome late Alliances, and many other suspicious Steps by certain Powers on the Continent, seem'd to portend some big Mischief to his Country, he could not with any colourable Pretence inveigh against the necessary Precautions taken by his Prince, nor sling Dire at those saithful Subjects that dutifully join in strengthening his Royal Bands,

The Incendiary would be inconfiftent with himfelf, did he own Dangers which he had labour'd for many Years to bring upon his Country, or did he wish his Prince Success, whom he had industriously endea-you'd to diffress ever fince his Accession to the Crown. No; Caleb is too much L'bomme du Cabinet to flep out of his Road, or appear affected with the gloomy Prospect of the Designs of foreign hostile Intuders.

After treating our just Apprehensions of Dangers on abroad with the utmost Ridicule, he tells us, That in the Year 1707, when there was an actual and confiderable Embarkation at Dunkirk, in favour of the Pretender, our Fleet was not augmented to above Thirty Sail, nor our Land-Forces to above 7 or 8000 Men, befides about as many more, that were ready to embark at Oftend in Case of Necesfity. And from these tallacious Premites, ne would draw Consequences in disfavour of our present Precautions, in order to asperse his Majesty and his Ministers, and to exasperate the Subject.

But supposing our Armament both by Land and Sea in 1707 did not exceed Mr. D'Anvers's Account of it, I don't think but every naby find Man, who looks into the present State of Affairs at Home and Abroad, will imagine it to equal, at least, that which we now see order'd by Authority

In 170; most of the Powers of Europe were confederated and in actual War against France, which was at that Time reduced to fo great Extremity by the Success of their United Force, that the had scarce any other Game left but drawing off our Attention and Troops from Flanders, where the most fentibly felt the Effects of our Power.

This was the genuine and only View of France in that Undertaking. Our Ministers at that Time were sensible of her Drift, and treated her Menaces in the Manner they deferved. They knew her Defign was to defeat the Schemes of the Allies, or at least to delay the Operations of the enfuing Campaign; but yet like faithful, prudent Ministers they took such Precautions, as would render the Defigns of France abortive, even were they as really intended against these Kingdoms directly, as they had Reasons for believing that they were not.

To this End a Fleet, far furction to the Enemy's. was fitted out with the greatest Expedition that was ever known in that Seafon of the Year; The Difatfected were fought and fecured; the Troops in the Kingdom were properly flation'd; and fuch a Num ber of Men were order'd to the Flemib Coaft, which upon Occasion might be follow'd by a greater, as might in Eight and forty Hours land any where, and and be an Over-match for the Invaders.

Here was no Nec-shity for raising such Troops on this Emergency; for as we were Masters of the Sea, and might have any Number the Queen pleas of from Flanders, it would be ridiculous to truft to new-rais'd Men, when there was a large Body of victorious Veterans, which she might have commanded to any Part of the Kingdom she should think proper. The Management of the Fleet was equally prudent. There were Ships enow fitted out to be an Overmatch for the Enemy's Fleet from Dunkirk, and we were fenfible they had no other in any Condition to annoy us from any other Quarter.

But will any Man who casts his Eye ever so superficially over the Continent, say, that things are now in the like Situation, or that our present Preparations frould not exceed those in 1707? Arthur Time we had most of the Powers of Europe obliged to us by de-fensive as well as offersive Alliances; we had an Army of 20000 Natives and above 30000 Fereigners in our Pay within Call; we could have no Dread of the Power of Spain, in the Bowels of which we had two different Corps of Troops; and Charles XII's Enmity to Peter I, and Augustus I left us no Room to apprehend any Danger from the North.

Without pretending to fathom the Secrets of the Cabinet, or travel after very diffant and remote Dangers, won't it be admitted, that we have Reason to goard against fo jealous and revengeful a People as the Spaniards, with whom it may be faid we are in actual War. Should we in the Course of this Conreft with Spain humble or diffres her, either in En rope or America, as 'tis to be hoped we shall, in order o future Security, would it not be natural to suppose, that a certain formidable Power, attached to her by Intereft as well as Blond, will arm in her Defence with all her Force? Has not this powerful, natural Ally of Spain lately entred into certain Treaties, which it would be imprudent not to fulpect and guard againft? And should an open Rupture with this intriguing formidable Power, become the Consequence of our just War upon Spain, may it not be naturally supposed, that Attempts from more Quarters than one will be made to diffurb the Repole of these Nations? In such Case I would ask Caleb, if he thinks our

but it may so happen, from contrary Winds and the Inclemency of Scasons, that they may become en-tirely uscless. We have a very large Extent of Coast to guard, which is fo fituated, that no Station our Fleers can be in, will be always proper to protect all the Parts of these Kingdoms from an inserior maritime Power.

This then being the Case with regard to Security from our naval Power, I would ask the modest Calebagain, if he does not think a Land Force of absolute Necessity; and whether a less than that now on feet would answer the Purpose of Security, in case such Attempts as have been mentioned fhould be made upon one or more Parts of thefe Kingdoms!

But as in War an Eye should be had to offending as well as defending against an Enemy, may it not be fometimes expedient to make Descents upon the Spanifb or other Coafts? May it not be necessary to support Malecontents in Spain, America, or ellewhere, in order to cut out Work for the Boemy, and keep the War from our own Doors? If any thing of this ind should be thought necessary, would not Land Forces be of absolute Necessity? Again, if the States General should be attack'd in Consequence of their Friendship and Succour to us in the Course of this War, should not we be in a Condition to support them with a Body of Troops?

But fays the painted Daw, We have $,750,000.

Men in Great Britain capable of braving Arms, and why might not they be rely'd upon to fecure na against all Invasions? In answer to this shrewd Querift, I would ask him, Wher: were his Millions when this Kingdom was severally invaded by the Sayour, the Danes, and Normans; and before them, by Julius Cafar? What Sta d it his favourite Militia make against Mackinigh and three or our hundred Highlanders in 1715? What Stand do above 100000 able-bodied Corfeens make against a Handful of French? Or, what Prowe's did Peter I's Millions of Ruffians thew against a Handful of Swedes, before they taught him and his Subjects the Art of War by a continued Walts of their Country ?

So true it is, that what is every body's Bufinefi le no body's Bufin:fs, that a Militia never was not never can be depended upon on great and fudden Emergen-But as so much has been already said on the Subject of Militias, to prove the Ufelefness of that Sort of Army but when mixed with regular Forces, & fhall conclude this Paper with wifhing that this unfeafonable Advocate for Militias, this Trojan in Greek Armour may meet with that Scorn an ! Contempt from all Well wifhers to thefe Nations which his falle Zeal and Hypocrify deserve.
